Building A Character Chapter Summary

A Life of Character: Chapter 1 - The Building of Character. By J.R. Miller. The building of character is the most important business of life. It matters little what works a man may leave in the world; his real success is measured by what he has wrought along the years in his own being. True character must be built after divine patterns.

A Life of Character: Chapter 1 - The Building of Character

There comes a point about halfway through "Building a Character" when Stanislavski's earnest young protagonist, Kostya, complains to his mentor, Torstov, that this batch of lessons all seem rather technical and not nearly as much fun as all the creativity and inspiration that was the foundation of the last batch of lessons (found in Stanislavski's first volume, "An Actor Prepares").
